

ABSTRACT

Methods and compositions are described which are useful for increasing the peripheral blood flow in mammals during conditions of hemodilution. The methods and compositions involve the use of materials to increase the blood viscosity in the 5 system of microscopic blood vessels.